Artillery bombardment injures 3 civilians in Loikaw during sham election

In the lead up to their sham election, the military council continued their advancements into Karenni State, particularly at the Shan-Karenni border, resulting in confrontations with combined revolutionary forces. However, on December 25, in admission of their failure to control large parts of Karenni State, the military council excluded the three Karenni townships of Mese, Shadaw and Pasaung from the list of townships where the third phase of the election would be held. On December 28, in the first phase of the sham election, polling was held in Loikaw and Bawlake under tight security. During polling, the military council carried out heavy artillery bombardment within and around Loikaw town, causing serious injuries to three civilians.

Timeline of conflict incidents during December

On the evening of December 2, in the Pinlaung-Pekhon township border area of southern Shan State, after daily fighting, the junta military council troops and their allied Pa-O National Organization (PNO) troops entered South Salone village and burned down homes of locals.

On December 3, two men, aged 45 and 40, living in Pankang ward, Loikaw township, were injured when their tractor hit a landmine while returning from work in a field. The tractor they were driving was also damaged.

On December 6, at around 10 pm, an airstrike by the junta military council on the Palong IDP camp in eastern Loikaw township damaged an IDP school building.

On December 7, at around 8 pm, a military council jet fighter bombed a non-combatant area in the western part of Demawso township three times, damaging a car and some houses. The junta's LIB 102 based in Ngwe Taung, eastern Demawso township, also opened fire with heavy weapons on that day.

On December 12, a man from Salin Moe Ngan village was found dead in his car in the western part of Pi-king village, Pekhon township.

On December 14, a man displaced from a camp in Pruso township who had been seriously injured in a drone attack by the junta military council while collecting paddy at around 3 pm on October 26, died after receiving treatment for more than a month.

On the morning of December 18, the junta's LIB 422 based in Moebye fired heavy weapons into villages west of Moebye, which exploded near the villages.

On December 26, at night after 9 pm, the junta's LIB 422 based in Moebye fired three rounds of artillery fire at the outskirts of the town.

On the morning of December 28, the troops of the military council continuously fired heavy artillery into and around Loikaw town, where their sham election was being held. Two shells exploded in the town, seriously injuring three men aged 28, 29, and 30.
